usually to talk about andy warhol is to talk about campbell s soup cans and marilyn monroe unknown to most people is the fact that his work also addresses and criticizes the language of abstraction by appropriating several of its formal devices and its spiritual and agonized rhetoric the shadows parody abstract expressionism to uncover its lack of deep meaning as the product of a photomechanical process in which a real but ambiguous image of a shadow is depicted on the canvas the shadows depart from the supposedly nonfigurative and direct expression of an idea or subject encouraged by abstraction however despite their deception which is amplified by the exploitation of formal devices usually associated with abstract expressionism the shadows are capable of projecting an intense emotional presence similar to the one conveyed by the great masters of the new york school in other words warhol produces a false but powerful abstraction
